PRRT&HS Website Corrupted

As of Wednesday, October 1, 2014, the PRRT&HS became aware that the national PRRT&HS web site and all of its ancillary pages have suffered a malware attack. This attack resulted in code being placed on most of the pages within our site. This code attempts to load a piece of malware onto your computer if you access the site. This attack appears to have been part of a much larger attack on our ISP. A number of internet providers such as Google have identified this issue and will provide warnings if you attempt to access the site, however, not all providers do so. We would urge anyone who has accessed the site within the past 3-4 weeks to scan their computer using specialized malware detection software. A program recommended by security experts to us, that recognizes the attacking software used in this case, is available at malwarebytes.com. A free version for PCs (not mac) can be downloaded at that site. While we have attempted to clean up our web sites, it now appears that the site will have to be restored completely from backups. Please be patient as we attempt to do this. We will notify members via our email lists and eNews Extra when we have determined that the site is clean.
